A glimpse of the past

KATE BUTLER

Special to County Life

Over the last couple of months, I've had the pleasure of leading a few walking tours around Haliburton Village. Tours like these, undoubtedly underline the ways in which the streetscape of our community has changed over the last century and a half, but it's also exciting to consider those buildings which provide a link with our past. For instance, the Echo's offices are housed in a building which dates back to almost exactly 100 years ago. The house was originally constructed to provide a home for Lila Laking and her daughter Evelyn. Lila's husband, Jack, was the manager of his father's lumber company. They were a prominent family in the community with both Jack and his father, William, briefly serving as reeve, but in 1917, the family was forever changed when Jack disappeared mysteriously on Drag Lake. He was taking wages out to one of the lumber camps, but never arrived. Due to the money involved, rumours abounded as to what might have happened, but his disappearance also meant that his widow could no longer live in the company house the family had once occupied. A new house at the corner of Highland and Cedar was constructed, and it remained Lila's home for many years.

When she moved into the house, the First World War was drawing to a close. In fact, we suspect that the photo shown here was actually taken at the time of the unveiling of our local cenotaph in 1919, hence the house being covered in flags. It was a time for the community to mourn, but also to pull together and look with hope to the future.

It's amazing to think what Lila Laking would have seen around the village when she stepped out her front door. The shores of Head Lake were lined with boathouses, as well as sawmills which contributed a constant hum to the air, not to mention the smell of wood being processed. The train from Lindsay would have run essentially past her front door. From the front porch of the house, she could have seen all the comings and goings from the Grand Central Hotel, while a wander down Main Street to purchase provisions might have taken her to Charlie Kellett's store at the corner of Highland and Maple. Kellett's 1912 Model T was reputed to be the first automobile in the village and even by later in the decade, cars must have still been a bit of a novelty of Haliburton's roads. Lila might have then popped across the road to send a letter at the post office in Dover's Store. By this time, James Dover would have passed away, but his daughter, Catherine has taken over as postmistress and it's easy to imagine the two women passing the time of day.

This week, as you travel around our community, I hope you'll take some time to think about the reminders of our community's past, both overt and subtle, that are all around us and the stories that are contained within. Who knows, you might be able to hear a little bit of the past...

Funding available for veterans

SUE TIFFIN

County Life Staff

Financial help is available for veterans and their families through Veterans Affairs Canada.

Ed Pickard, veteran services officer of the Haliburton Legion, branch 129, said he recently attended a seminar in which funding was discussed and urged veterans to get in touch with him for assistance.

"We've got to find some way to reach the people who might not know they're eligible for this," he said. "You don't have to be a Legion member to access those funds, just a veteran. There's been the odd one or two but I think we have more veterans here than what we know about. They just haven't come forward. If people don't contact us, we don't know about them."

Pickard said his own wife, Billy, was offered assistance prior to her death earlier this year.

"Just for example, my wife a WW2 vet, Veterans Affairs couldn't do enough for us," he said. "We got wheelchairs, walkers, one of those chairlifts put in to the top of the stairs. That was all covered by Veterans Affairs."

The Haliburton Legion can help veterans with the process of applying for financial help.

"I think the difficulty is letting people know that they may be able to get funding," he said. "It's hard to reach people when they're not aware there's something there for them. Anyone who was in the service, they're considered a veteran. If there's anything that can relate back to their service, any injuries, whether it's physical or mental. My idea is, if you think you can get it, let's put the application in and see where it goes. You might get something, you might get nothing, but at least we can get the ball rolling."

The message is an important one to get out, according to Ed, because he knows it can help.

Before his time in the veteran services officer position, he said a destitute widow was struggling to pay to heat her home, but Veterans Affairs stepped in to help with that cost. He's seen people helped in a variety of ways over the years.

"One person that I know had a bad back, and I just happened to talk to him about it," said Ed. "He said, when he was in the army, he had an accident of some kind and it affected his back. I asked him, 'are you getting anything for it?' And he said, 'well, no.' I said, 'well, let's put an application in and find out and see if we can get something for you.' He ended up getting $24,000. But he didn't even realize that he had a hope of getting anything."

Pickard said he learned at a recent conference that veterans suffering with post-traumatic stress disorder have often-times been reluctant to come forward for help, but there is assistance available to them. Although veterans are informed of civilian transition guidance and funding services when they leave the service, Ed said he thinks not everyone looks into funding.

"I just think there's people out there who could probably use the help," he said. "The main thing is to get them to contact us at the branch. If we think it's feasible, and quite often it is, it goes to Ontario Command, to our service officer down there, and they contact whichever agencies might help."

For more information, call Ed Pickard, veteran services officer, at the Haliburton Legion by calling 705-457-2571.

Top 10 Thanksgiving side-effects

ANOTHER THANKSGIVING has come and gone and those of us who survived it will face numerous side-effects. Needless to say, the pilgrims did not anticipate the holiday's effect on the rest of us. Here are the top 10 ways I have discovered.

1. For a month afterwards, you suddenly lose it when someone offers you a turkey sandwich.
2. You wake up and ask what day it is.
3. You're done with pumpkin spice forever.
4. You realize that horrible rash on your face was actually cranberry sauce.
5. You're no longer thankful for anything – and won't be for the next three weeks.
6. You have a sudden appreciation for generously-sized track pants.
7. Every wild turkey in the neighbourhood is safe.
8. You have horrible nightmares about stuffing.
9. You consider going vegan until you actually try Tofurky.

Thriller puts ISIS in Haliburton County

ISIS IS HERE! That's the premise around which Minden author Michael Barnes builds the plot of his thriller The Haliburton ISIS Blow Down. Barnes, probably the most prolific writer in the county, has finally written a work of fiction. And like the seasoned veteran that he is, he's chosen a hot topic, to hopefully catch readers' attention.

"What would interest ISIS in Haliburton County?" Barnes asked me rhetorically.

"There are lots of places to hide," was his answer. "The story follows an ex-SAS man in England. (The SAS is a Special Forces unit of the British Army.) He is asked to come to Ontario to find an ISIS training camp located in Haliburton County."

The story follows the SAS man around the county and Bancroft as he averts a potentially serious tragedy.

"He goes back to the U.K., but ISIS follows him, seeking revenge," Barnes said. The "Blow Down" in the title is explained in the book. Barnes didn't want to reveal any more of the plot. But what he did reveal certainly piqued my interest.

Barnes has made his reputation as an authority on the history and folklore of Northern Ontario. According to his Writers Union of Canada Members Profile "Barnes was born in England and came to Canada in 1956. He was an educator in Northern Ontario until 1989 and moved to Haliburton in 1999. He holds a B.A. (Western, 1964) and an M.Ed. (Toronto, 1971). His work experience, in addition to service as a teacher and principal, includes Fleet Street copy boy, bush cook, Globe & Mail correspondent, CBC radio freelancer, newspaper columnist, speech and ghost writer. An author of 55 books with U.S. and Canadian houses, his writing area is the north and Northern Ontario, Highlands of Central Ontario, resource industries especially with regard to mining, and communities, as well as policing, with special reference to the Ontario Provincial Police." Barnes is also a recipient of the Order of Canada for his body of work on Northern Ontario.

Eighteen of Barnes's books are to be found among the tomes at the research library of the Royal Ontario Museum. "They're books on mining and the adventures of real people in the mining business," Barnes said. Among his other books are four about Haliburton County: Wolves and Haliburton Forest, Haliburton in Highland Ontario, Haliburton: Memories of Past Years, and The Essential Haliburton: Discover Highland Ontario. With these books alone Barnes has established himself as a noted chronicler of the lore of our Highlands, and as such is an ambassador, and promoter of the county.

As to why he chose to write a book of fiction for the first time Barnes said that although it's likely to be a one-of, "it was the challenge ... adult fiction is the one type of book I've never written." When I asked him to identify his biggest single challenge he had to overcome he responded with a reference to William Deverell, a noted Canadian novelist, who said that plotting is the hardest thing to do. "And it is," Barnes concurred.

He also stated that he's a new member of the Writers Union of Canada Ghostwriters Program, and negotiations are underway for a ghostwriting assignment. Who knows, Barnes might find himself writing more fiction as a ghostwriter.

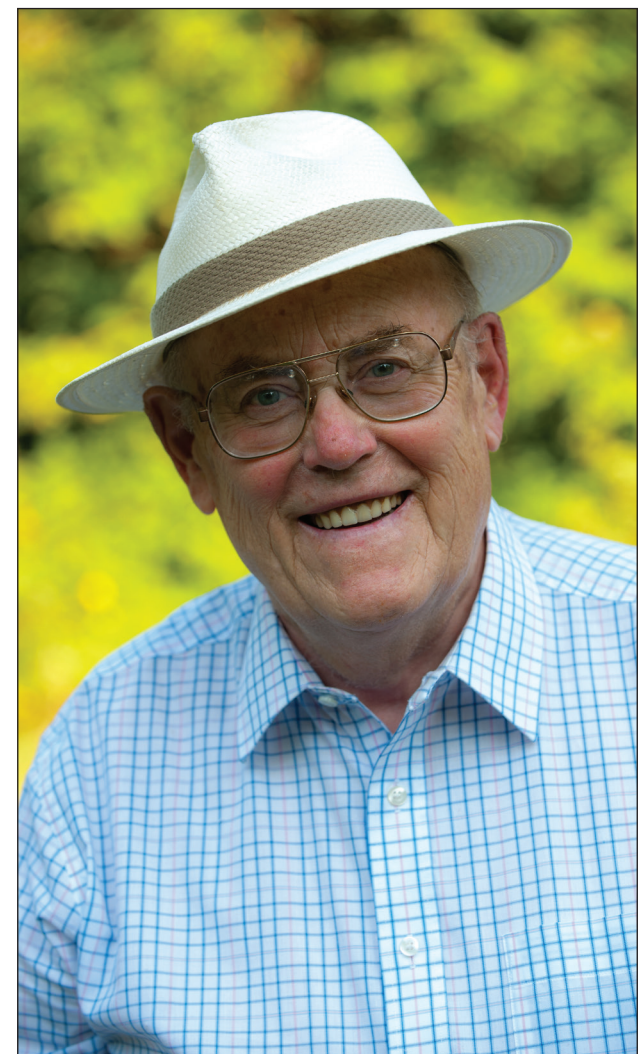

With most of his other books Barnes used publishing houses to put his books out there, but with The Haliburton ISIS Blow Down he's chosen to self-publish.

For now the book is only available online through Amazon Kindle, and you'll need an e-reader or iPad to read it. You just go to the Amazon site and put the title in the search box and the book will come up. "I put it on there to see if it gets interest, and if it does then I'll seek a publisher," Barnes said. This online version is 115 pages in length and costs $3.99.

ISIS in the Highlands? Stranger things have happened in fiction and in the real world, and it's certainly not above the realm of possibility; I seem to remember the exposing of a hidden Neo-Nazi enclave around Lochlin a few years back. But for Michael Barnes The Haliburton ISIS Blow Down represent a challenge overcome and "another way of promoting Haliburton County."

Making Halloween last all week long

KATE BUTLER

What's your favourite part of Halloween? The creative costumes? The eerie decorations and the creepy stories? The candy? You can enjoy all this and more as part of Hali Halloween, a celebration of all things fun and spooky about Halloween in Haliburton. Building on the success of Halloween celebrations in and around the village in previous years, Hali Halloween will feature an entire week of varied and exciting programs from Oct. 25 to Nov. 1, along with workshops throughout October to help get you in the spirit – pun intended!

A program of the Municipality of Dysart et al, Hali Halloween features many community partners including the Haliburton Highlands Museum and Visible Voices Open Arts Studio. A driving force behind this event has been Amy Brohm, one of the biggest fans of Halloween I know. When I asked her about the huge appeal of the holiday for her, she told me, "I think it's about exploring the idea of becoming something or someone different."

Disguising yourself is, of course, a huge part of Halloween, and you can get started with workshops, including mask making and foam wig making, happening at Visible Voices on Wednesdays, starting on Oct. 3. Now, once your costume is ready, you'll, of course, want to show it off! On Oct. 27, meet at the Dysart municipal office to parade through the village to Head Lake Park for some entertainment inspired by the season. The parade is for all ages and there will be prizes!

The modern tradition of Halloween costumes actually has a long history. The roots of Halloween, as we know it, lie in the early Celtic New Year, known as Samhain, a time when it was believed that the barrier between this world and the "otherworld" became very thin and it was thought that disguising yourself might keep you safe. You can learn more about the history of Halloween by joining us at the Haliburton Museum for a special talk on Oct. 25, which will be followed by ghost stories and the chance to explore the museum's historic buildings under the cover of darkness – who knows what you might see...or sense!

Edgar Allen Poe is perhaps one of the authors most associated with Halloween – his atmospheric tales of the macabre just seem to embody the season. Nightfall, a theatrical production which brings his short stories to life will be presented by local youth at the museum on Oct. 26 and 27. This is a great opportunity to support local talent and also have a seasonal scare!

Though we might think of Halloween as simply a dark and spine-chilling time of the year, it's important to remember that traditions of honouring and celebrating the dead can be found all over the world, and that they can also be full of joy. One of the highlights of this year's festivities will be our Day of the Dead celebrations. Melodie Acero, co-ordinator of Visible Voices, will be sharing Mexican traditions at the Wednesday workshops, as well as at a special Day of the Dead event at the museum on Nov. 1.

According to Acero, "Day of the Dead is one of the most lively and beautiful festivals in Mexico, full of flowers, music, art, costumes, and candlelight. One reason for the lack of somberness is that this Mexican tradition speaks to a joyful afterlife, that death is nothing to fear." She notes that "[t]he displays of colour, and joy, and laughter are also to show our departed loved ones that we are OK, so as not to worry their visiting souls." This year's Day of the Dead celebrations will be an exciting new addition to Hali Halloween and a wonderful opportunity to learn about another culture and its traditions – don't miss it!

Though this year's Hali Halloween schedule is jam-packed with events, the Hali Halloween committee envisions the festival continuing to grow year upon year. Looking to the future, Brohm said that she "would really like to see it grow into a multi-disciplinary arts event around the theme of Halloween."

For more details about this year's fantastic events, visit www.halihalloween.com – don't miss out on the most spooktacular time of the year!

Free resources to quit smoking

The Haliburton, Kawartha, Pine Ridge District Health Unit is promoting a series of free quit-smoking support programs coming this fall to Haliburton County, Northumberland County and the City of Kawartha Lakes. The Smoking Treatment for Ontario Patients (STOP) Program offers resources and five weeks of free nicotine patches to participants at no cost.

The Health Unit, in partnership with the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health, is running the a STOP session in Haliburton County on Wednesday, Oct. 24, at 10:30 a.m. in Wilberforce.

To see if you qualify for STOP, call the health unit at 1-866-888-4577, ext. 2202.

Public health nurse Karen Taylor encourages people to sign up for the STOP Program to help them get on the road to tobacco-free living.

"Research shows that patches and other nicotine replacement therapy can increase the odds of people becoming smoke-free," she says. "The fact that patches and quit-smoking resources are offered at no charge through STOP is just another reason to take part in the program. Quitting smoking is a great way to improve your own health and protect your loved ones from the harmful effects of tobacco."

Taking Fleming College into the future

MAUREEN ADAMSON

Fleming College President

I am Maureen Adamson, and I am proud and honoured to serve our communities as the new president of Fleming College.

As a proud Fleming alumnus, and after spending most of my career in Toronto, I am thrilled to return to my hometown of Peterborough. As the former Deputy Minister of Tourism, Sport and Culture, and the Deputy Minister, Status of Women, I saw the tremendous power and potential of collaboration between government, communities and stakeholders across the province.

I am excited to begin working with our students and our communities to take Fleming to the next level of excellence. This venerable institution representing Peterborough, Lindsay, Haliburton and Cobourg has a long history of societal contributions that shape our community value systems. Our students deepen the social and cultural fabric of our communities and Ontario. My goal is to ensure that Fleming becomes an even greater source of skilled talent and quality resources.

Our annual economic contribution to the region is now almost one half billion dollars and growing. As a key economic driver, Fleming brings more than 6,000 students to Peterborough, Lindsay, Haliburton and Cobourg from all over the world, strengthening our global network and international connections. We have over 530 full-time and 700 part-time employees who are an important part of the fabric of our community through their expertise, leadership, philanthropy and volunteerism. From local to national to global connections, our students and more than 74,000 alumni give back to our communities by sharing their work, their learnings, mentorship and life experiences.

The services that Fleming offers the community range from physical assets to training and support. We have an amazing athletic centre and sports fields on the Sutherland Campus that is shared by students and the community. We also provide services to support our regional workforce in transitioning and re-skilling as we experience industry disruptions such as those that Canadian General Electric and Sears have been through recently. In turn, our students have also been the privileged recipients of many generous bursaries and donations that are a testament to the value that our community places on our students and our future.

I am eager to continue our partnerships with each of our local communities including a special emphasis on our First Nations communities. Perhaps most importantly, I want to hear from you with respect to your views and your ideas for how Fleming can support all of our communities and businesses.

As I have been actively listening for the last few weeks, I have been most impressed by the commitment and passion of all faculty, staff and leaders of Fleming. Fleming has remained incredibly stalwart and resilient through some recent disruptions, including significant construction projects to enhance our physical spaces. I have sat with faculty, students and leaders at all four campuses to hear their concerns and ideas for the future.

I recognize that we have a lot to do. I want to ensure that Fleming is an even more capable and engaging partner and an even more attractive destination for prospective students. I am inspired by the possibilities for Fleming and our community and I am humbled by the knowledge, skills and tenacity of all things Fleming.

Maureen Adamson is the sixth president of Fleming College. The appointment marks several firsts for the college. Maureen is the first Fleming alumni to lead the college, as well as the first female and the first person originally from Peterborough to hold the position.

2018 Municipal Candidates Survey

SPECIES AT RISK:

Scientists say that we are in the sixth mass extinction of plants and animals. Differing from the other five extinctions, this one is caused by us through loss of habitat, introduction of exotic species and climate change. Haliburton County is home to several known species at risk. From bats and turtles to Butternut trees and American Ginseng the list is a getting longer as Climate Change alters our living environment. A list of the identified species can be found on the Haliburton Land Trust website <https://www.haliburtonlandtrust.ca/wildlife/species-at-risk>.

If elected, do you commit supporting the efforts made by several local organizations to protect species at risk and their habitat?

U-Links matching community-based research projects

U-Links Centre for Community Based Research has been working to match Trent geography, environmental science, forensics and international development studies students with local community-based-research projects. While the total number of U-Links' project proposals increased by 40 per cent this year, under-enrolment of students in community based research courses has meant that U-Links will not be able to match all the projects.

"While we exceeded our targets for project proposals this year, the student uptake was lower than expected," said Sonja Addison, program director.

Projects that are not time-sensitive can stay on the Trent and U-Links websites for matching over the 2019-20 academic year. "Often, projects that are not matched the year they are initially developed are matched the following year," said Addison. "We are very thankful to the all the community organizations who participated in project development over the last few months."

The U-Links team has been busy working on its own internal projects relating to developing and accessing community-based research.

U-Links and Community First: Impact of Community Engagement have jointly published a guide, Primer for Community Organizations with Research Questions. The purpose of the guide is to help community organizations create research-oriented relationships with university faculty. It includes critical steps for organizations who wish to engage in community based research, from finding the right partner to designing the project, research agreement and sharing the results.

Marie Gage, U-Links management committee member and author of the guide, noted that "gaining access to the research expertise of a university can be very important for small community agencies that do not have the resources to hire consultants. This document provides a template to help agencies succeed in establishing the right connections." The guide can be found on the "What's New" section on the U-Links website.

To better facilitate the dissemination of research in the county, U-Links is now hosting a new database where individuals can search past research by keyword, subject tag and community-based research area. The database includes a full screen map where users can view the locations of community-based research projects in Haliburton County. The direct link to the database can be found at <https://database.ulinks.ca>.

U-Links is also developing a new partnership with Fleming College, whereby Fleming students can participate in environmentally-focused community-based research and Community Service Learning opportunities in the County for course credit. This partnership will officially launch January 2019 but community service learning projects related to benthic sampling have already begun. U-Links is excited to be working with two of the Fleming's Frost Campus Programs: Sustainable Waste Management and Environmental Technology. It is expected that the partnership will help facilitate the higher number of projects generated by community organizations this year.

Getting their feet wet
Haliburton Highlands Home-school student Zaphod Cohrs, 10, stands in one of two outdoor showers, as his peers point at him as part of a lesson about how about how much water is used for a shower with and without an energy efficient showerhead. The demonstration was part of the Haliburton-Muskoka-Kawartha Children's Water Festival on Tuesday, Oct. 2 at the Kinark Outdoor Centre in Minden. Nearly 1,200 students attended the event, which included 52 interactive activity centres that explored the concepts of water conservation, water attitudes, water technology, water protection and water science. It was offered over two days for students from Grade 4 to 6 from schools from all over the Trillium Lakelands District School Board. The festival runs with the help of volunteers and is a project of Friends of Ecological and Environmental Learning (FEEL) and started in 2005. /DARREN LUM Staff

Risk of Lyme disease persists in fall

The Haliburton, Kawartha, Pine Ridge District Health Unit warns the risk of Lyme disease is still present until near-freezing conditions set into the area. That's because blacklegged (or deer) ticks that can carry the bacteria that causes Lyme disease remain active until temperatures drop and remain near the freezing mark.

Blacklegged ticks will settle on tall grasses and bushes, acting like hitchhikers until they can attach to a passing person or animal. Once attached, ticks will feed on the host's blood. If the black-legged tick is infected with the Borrelia burgdorferi bacteria that causes Lyme disease, it can pass the disease onto a person – especially if it has fed for more than 24 hours.

Lyme disease is a serious illness that includes symptoms like: skin rash, fever, headache and muscle/joint pain. In more serious cases, Lyme disease can lead to recurring arthritis, neurological problems, numbness or paralysis – especially if left untreated. If detected early, Lyme disease can be successfully treated with antibiotics.

When checking for ticks, pay close attention to the groin area, scalp, ankles, armpits, naval and behind ears/knees. Consider taking a shower as soon as you can to wash off any ticks. According to Richard Ovcharovich, manager of environmental health with the health unit, checking for ticks should also extend to pets.

What should people do if they find a tick on them? The health unit recommends the following:

Promptly and properly remove a tick from your body to prevent infection. Using finely-tipped tweezers, grasp the tick as close to your skin as possible. Pull it straight out, gently but firmly being able to remove the entire tick (head and all). Thoroughly clean the bite site with rubbing alcohol and/or soap and water. In areas not identified as high-risk, ticks can be dropped off at the health unit or your health care provider for testing. This is done for surveillance purposes to see if the ticks can transmit Lyme.

See a health care provider right away if the tick has been attached for more than 24 hours or if it is engorged (this means it's been feeding for some time). You should also get help if you experience symptoms of Lyme disease.
